

Pain relief

Inpatient Pain Team Patient Information Leaflet

Introduction

At The Dudley Group NHS Foundation Trust, we aim to give patients good pain relief and make them as comfortable as possible after surgery, injury and throughout their stay in hospital.

Good pain relief helps you:

- Feel better
- Move freely
- Recover quicker

What is the role of the inpatient pain team?

The team is made up of doctors and nurses with a specific role in managing pain. They will prescribe various types of pain relief specifically for you, based on your individual circumstances and the type of surgery you are having. This may include a pain relief device or pain medication that you take by mouth.

What types of pain relief are there?

Pain medication can be given in various forms depending on your condition and the type of surgery you have had. They include:

Medication by mouth

This will either be in the form of tablets, liquid or dissolvable preparations, given regularly or when you need them.

Intramuscular injection

This will be given by injection into a large muscle such as the thigh. It is used if patients are being sick or feeling extremely sick.

Intravenous injection

This will be given through a small plastic tube (cannula) straight into a vein for rapid pain relief. If you have had surgery, you may already have a cannula in place. The cannula can also be used to give anti-sickness medications for patients who are feeling sick or being sick.

Patient-controlled analgesia (PCA)

This is a pain relief pump controlled by the patient. It is programmed to allow you to deliver pain medication when you need it and has safety features to prevent harm (we have a separate information sheet about this).

Epidural

This is a pain relief pump used to deliver continuous pain medication through a catheter (small, plastic tube) in the spine (we have a separate information sheet about this). This method is only used in certain operations.

Local wound infiltration

This is a pain relief pump that delivers continuous pain medication to the site of the operation. It is only used in particular operations.

What happens after my operation?

When you wake from your anaesthetic in the recovery area, we will ask you about your pain and what it is like. This is best time to treat pain and you will get maximum benefits from the pain relief if it is given at this stage.

When you arrive on the ward, nurses will ask about your pain regularly and give you the pain relief that you have been prescribed. Good pain relief means that you will recover quicker from surgery. This will enable you to get up and about and carry out your daily activities sooner.

Can I ask for help?

If your pain control is not adequate at any time and you are still feeling pain, or if you have any questions or concerns about your pain relief, please ask the nurse. It is best to do this as soon as you can to enable us to respond quickly. If appropriate, a member of the pain team will visit you to discuss this.

If you have any questions, or if there is anything you do not understand about this leaflet, please contact:
